

Mysterious Light Photographed in Canadian Woods

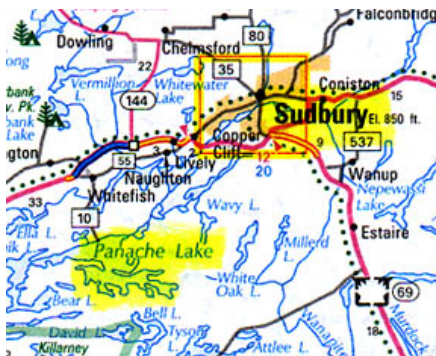

© 2005 by Linda Moulton Howe

Panache Lake, southwest of Sudbury, Ontario, Canada. Late afternoon digital photograph taken inside the shady woods. The hikers did not see the mysterious light. Photograph provided by Dennis Donohue.

Cropped close-up of the mysterious light in the digital image.

Panache Lake southwest of Sudbury is north of Toronto and not far from Lake Huron in the Great Lakes.

August 7, 2005 Sudbury, Ontario, Canada - Recently I received an e-mail from a Canadian resident with a 2004 photo attachment that looks very similar to a mysterious light photographed in Glass Mountain, Australia, grass circles back in April of 2004. Below is the e-mail and attached photograph, along with a look again at the April 2004, grass circle and mysterious light images from Australia.

"Hello Linda,

I wanted to send you a photo taken by my son about a year ago. It contains an anomalous light which wasn't in the viewfinder at the time it was taken. It was late afternoon a short distance into the woods behind my daughter-in-law's parents' camp which is on Lake Panache, located south-west of Sudbury, Ontario. They have always sensed a feeling of tranquility in that spot in the woods.

I believe it bears a striking resemblance to the light anomaly in an Australian crop circle in the Earthfiles archives dated 04/14/2004. This picture was taken with a digital camera in the shade. The people in the photograph are not looking at the light, but the camera itself.
